Load Management
Energy Choices That Make Sense

Here's how it works

During times when many people need electricity at once, Flint Energies must meet that demand. At a certain point, additional – and more expensive – generation units are needed to supply the energy. This increases the price of electricity.

Smart Select uses a device to briefly interrupt the flow of power to central air conditioners during times of high demand for electricity. Electric water heaters are turned off between 2 p.m. and 7 p.m. from June to September on days when demand for electricity is at its highest. (Most participants don't even notice.)

By shifting the time some people use energy, Flint Energies can manage the demand for it and decrease the need to build new power plants. This also helps keep the cost of electricity stable – and that benefits everyone.

The program could operate during critical times and possibly in the winter months, if the demand for power becomes so great that it creates a need to manage the use of electricity.
